

Rogerson to Honor Secretary John F. Kerry at Welcome Home Gala May 15, 2017

Rogerson's 2017 Welcome Home Gala is proud to be honoring Secretary John F. Kerry with the Charles E. Rogerson Award. Secretary Kerry exemplifies a lifetime of personal and professional commitment to service of his community — globally, nationally, and locally. A Boston resident, Secretary Kerry will be surrounded by many great friends and family as he comes home for this important night.

Dr. Gary Kearney, a Rogerson Board member and longtime friend of Secretary Kerry, is among the outstanding co-chairs of this great event. "All of the many years I've known the Secretary, and watched his career grow to serve more and more people, I have never seen him stray from his utter commitment to the cause at hand and his passion for helping his fellows," said Dr. Kearney of Rogerson's honoree.

Secretary John F. Kerry will be honored at Rogerson's Welcome Home at the Fairmont Copley Plaza on May 15, 2017 and will participate in a question and answer session with Lawrence O'Donnell of MSNBC's The Last Word.

"Rogerson has a legacy of serving the local community that extends back nearly 160 years, while at the same time responding with innovation to an ever-changing modern market. In much the same way as Rogerson has extended a local commitment into a national model of excellence, Secretary Kerry has built a legacy of professional service from his Boston home to virtually every community on the globe," adds John Hall, Rogerson Board member, Welcome Home co-chair, and friend of the Secretary.

Jamie Seagle, President of Rogerson, is excited to be honoring the Secretary, "As someone who has committed 45 years of my career to securing the wellbeing of elders, I have the utmost respect for the legacy and the man we have selected to receive this year's award at Welcome Home on May 15."

Rogerson Commits Critical Resources to Preserving Daggett-Crandall-Newcomb Home

Rogerson has committed its expertise and management resources to Daggett-Crandall-Newcomb Home, a 28-bed residential care facility in Norton, Massachusetts.

This facility in the southeastern suburbs has long been an essential resource to the community but, in recent years, has been in increasing danger of closing its doors. Rogerson has stepped in and is providing the essential support needed to place them strongly back on their feet and best able to serve those in need of their services. Laurie Trilling, Rogerson's Chief Operating Officer, shares that "Residential care, the kind of care offered at DCN Home, is a unique option in senior living. It is a perfect choice to consider for someone needing assistance with day-to-day living and management of chronic medical conditions that many elders experience. Unlike traditional assisted living, residential care communities offer enhanced nursing services allowing residents to remain in their community for as long as possible." Trilling adds, "There are not enough of these kinds of critical resources in the neighborhoods where seniors hope to continue to live. We are proud to be able to commit resources and staff to restoring this property and its service provision to a sustainable and long-term partner in our mission to support elders aging in community."

Rogerson is Shaping the Future of Healthcare and Aging in Community

Rogerson underwent a strategic planning process a few years ago and recommitted to the long-standing tradition of providing supportive health services for elders. Darcey Adams joined Rogerson in 2016 as the Vice President of Health Services, and brought tremendous experience to Rogerson's outstanding leadership team. In just a short time, Adams partnered with Hebrew Senior Life to implement the Mi-Wish research project at two of Rogerson's housing sites. The researchers will implement the second phase of this multi-year project and will provide wellness programs and gather data over a twelve-month period. Additionally, she is relaunching a partnership with Massachusetts General Hospital and Boston Senior Homecare to implement wellness programs at Beacon House which will include education and support from a team of registered nurses and clinical social workers. This program, Connecting for Wellness, will also include a research component and will be exploring the impact of providing medical and behavioral health services at housing sites and the impact on overall health outcomes including emergency room visits and hospitalizations.

Under Darcey Adams' leadership, Rogerson's adult day health programs have increased census to capacity and achieved licensing from the Department of Public Health through deficiency free audits of the programs. Rogerson is also gearing up to participate in a Leading Age Healthcare and Housing Pilot that will be a very innovative program and model for caring for elders in housing on a national level. As the President emeritus of MADSA (Massachusetts Adult Day Services Association) Adams has been a major advocate for successfully bringing ADH to the attention of State funders and shaping the critical dialogue about the need for these essential services provided by Rogerson and providers across the state.
