Adult Day Health Programs: Meeting the Growing Need for Memory Care

Rogerson's Adult Day Health Programs receive numerous calls every week from families desperate for memory care support for their loved ones. As one of only three dementia specific day programs in the state, our Roslindale Dementia Day program is quickly reaching capacity. Rogerson's Egleston Adult Day Health Program has adjusted its space and trained its staff to meet the deepening community need for memory care. With ample open space for those who need to pace, clear visibility lines across the physical space, and plentiful natural light, the Rogerson Egleston Adult Day Health Program is an ideal physical setting for serving elders suffering from dementia. Daily oversight is directed by Keisha Desmangles, assistant program manager, who has tremendous experience in caring for older adults with memory loss. Keisha is leading specialized dementia training for staff which will increase Rogerson's ability to serve today's critical demand for memory care.

Rogerson pioneered Adult Day Health in Massachusetts and remains committed to innovating these important community-based services to meet the burgeoning needs of older adults and their families.

Rogerson's Egleston Adult Day Health Program was adjusted to create spaces conducive to the needs of people with memory loss, including large open spaces for pacing and ample sunlit windows that look out to a gated accessible patio, supported by staff who are receiving ongoing training in memory care.
