

Who we are.

Rogerson believes that elders are capable of leading rich, fulfilling lives when given the support and resources they need to live independently. Since its founding in 1860 as the Home for Aged Men, Rogerson has been providing housing and health care to help them do so. As a non-profit, Rogerson must raise private funds to support its properties and programs.

What we do.

Rogerson serves over 2,000 greater Boston families through 29 facilities and programs — providing greater independence and longevity to elders and low-income individuals. These services include housing, adult day health programs, innovative fitness training, and memory loss care and treatment.

How we help.

The challenges of providing affordable housing and health care are constantly changing and growing. By working cooperatively with other non-profits, Rogerson is able to maximize resources and provide quality affordable housing and supportive services.
