Your generosity will help see us through this historic time

Philanthropy has long been the foundation on which Rogerson has built a 160-year-legacy of caring for elders and changing their lives for the better. Rogerson serves more than 1,800 individuals and families through its affordable housing and supportive health services. In many cases we prevent homelessness. Our Adult Day Health programs prevent unnecessary hospitalizations by keeping elders safe, strong and engaged. Creating more than just places to live, Rogerson creates ways for the most vulnerable among us to thrive - older adults, many with underlying health issues, or memory loss.

Now Rogerson is at the epicenter of fighting a pandemic and the devastating impact COVID-19 has had on our communities, especially on seniors. The Rogerson model - a manageable, livable environment, lent itself to adapting quickly when COVID-19 took hold. We were able to respond to protect our residents and staff.

The need for Rogerson's expertise and support in the community is epic right now and our response must be equally so, or we will fail a generation of seniors. To date, we have successfully achieved zero infections at many of our housing sites and we continue to maintain comparatively low infection rates across all 23 properties. We need your help now more than ever or we may lose critical ground in this battle. Your charitable donations help us fulfill our mission.

Rogerson understands that safe, affordable housing and supportive health services are critical to good health and allow seniors to thrive in our communities with dignity. We look to your generosity to see us through this historic time.
